Chickasaw County residents turns their attention to the screens in the courtroom during a presentation by County Assessor Ray Armel at the beginning of a public hearing on the county's max levy that was held Wednesday night.

Supervisors get an earful on tax asking

County residents speak out again 18.95 percent jump, tell board it needs to differentiate between 'needs' and 'wants'

By BOB FENSKE
Of the Reporter

The 50 or so residents who turned out Wednesday evening for Chickasaw County's public hearing on its maximum tax levy sent a message to the Board of Supervisors: An 18.95 percent increase in tax-asking by the county is unacceptable.

For almost an hour, residents not only challenged the supervisors to lower its tax asking for the fiscal year but also expressed their frustrations on the confusing nature of Iowa's property tax laws, which they said were further exacerbated by a letter property owners received as part of new law passed by the Iowa Legislature and signed into law by Gov. Kim Reynolds signed into law last year.

"On one hand, you get the letter and it looks like your property taxes are going to go down and then you read in the paper it's 19 percent going up," New Hampton resident Darlene Schwickerath said. "It's hard for us lay people to understand that."

Supervisors opened Wednesday evening's meeting by having County Assessor Ray Armel explain the property-tax system, and as he did in a story that appeared in last week's Reporter, he said the letter the county sent out detailing levy rates proposed by counties, cities and schools would affect property owners is "deceiving."

"The Department of Management has said it is deceiving because they utilized $100,000 value for both years ... and we all know that property values usually increase."

He pointed out that "If the values increase, levy rates stay the same and the rollback stay the same, taxes will go up."

And Armel readily admitted

Precipitation was beautiful, sight, wasn't it?

Recent rain, snow couldn't have come at a better time for farmers

By BOB FENSKE
Of the Reporter

Sure, the heavy wet snow and the rain made for some interesting travel Sunday and Monday, but it was, in the words of our area's ISU Extension agronomist, absolutely perfect.

"This has been a welcome few days," Terry Basol said from his office at the Northeast Iowa Research Farm that is located near Nashua. "I know a lot of guys, a lot of growers, who didn't mind this one bit."

By the time the latest system cleared out of the area late Tuesday, Nashua had received more than 1.7 inches of precipitation in a span of six days, and for the only the second time since February 2023, it looks like we're going to finish the month with above-normal precipitation.

The timing, too, was perfect for area growers

Twenty-two students, 12 projects all advance to state contest after stellar showing at Sullivan Brothers National History Day district

By BOB FENSKE
Of the Reporter

The Nashua-Plainfield National History Day program has experienced plenty of success over the past two-plus decades.

It has had district champions, state champions, national placewinners and national champions, but Monday, the 22 students who make up this year's team did something no other Nashua-Plainfield group has done.

They had a "perfect" day at the Sullivan Brothers NHD district contest that was held at the Central Rivers AEA in Cedar Falls. All 22 students, representing 12 projects, advanced to the state contest that will be held next month in Des Moines.

"This is the first time in my 21-year tenure as the National History Day advisor at NP that we've advanced every single project to the state contest," National History Day advisor Suzy Turner said. "Better yet, the students were talking on the bus ride home about the ways they wanted to improve their projects between now and the April 15 state contest submission deadline."

Presenting projects that they began early last fall, Nashua-Plainfield students brought home

Seven county candidates will be on primary ballot

By BOB FENSKE
Of the Reporter

Chickasaw County voters, at least those who live within the boundaries of District 4 and who are registered Republicans, will have a contested race during the June 4 primary.

And a fall rematch between District 3 Supervisor Jake Hackman and former Chickasaw County Auditor Joan Knoll is all but a certainty.

Those two nuggets are probably the most newsworthy after the primary filing period came to a close this past Friday. A trio of candidates — Hackman and Knoll for the District 3 seat

Resident: Tax-asking increase by the county 'not sustainable'

HEARING: FROM 1

Wednesday night that Iowa's property tax system is complex. Property values can change from year to year, but so, too, does the rollback which actually sets the actual tax value of property. In Chickasaw County, for example, the average home in some cities and townships will actually have a smaller tax value next year than it did this year.

Supervisors, though, set their max levies higher this year than they did last year. While General Basic remained the same at $3.50 per $1,000 valuation, the maximum allowed by state law, the proposed General Supplemental levy increased by more than a $1 per $1,000 valuation and the proposed Rural Services Basic's max levy jumped by almost 50 cents per $1,000 valuation to $3.70100.

And that means many property owners in the county would see healthy increases to the county portion of their property-tax bills if the max levy is part of the final budget and levy the county must certify by April 30.

And that didn't sit well with numerous residents, including Arnie Boge, who represented the Nashua area for 24 years on the Board of Supervisors before retiring in 2010.

"Nineteen percent is not sustainable," he said. "A closing comment is can't we just live within our means? Do what needs to be done to balance the budget and not raise the taxes that kind of percentage. I do appreciate that the cost of inflation and the cost of things are going up, but 19 percent can't be sustained."

He asked board members if they "sit down and discuss amongst yourself what you have for new dollars? If you don't, you ought to." Boge added that during the meetings he's attended since last spring that he believes board members haven't differentiated between the county's needs and wants.

"Now, we've all been down that path with our children and whatever we have for responsibilities," he said. "We have to place a different value on the wants and the needs based on what you have to work with."

Other residents chided the board for decisions it has made in the past year, and one subject that consistently came up was the board's decision late last summer to pay more of the costs for family health insurance plans.

"I do believe the county should provide adequate benefits for the employees," Jeremy McGrath said. "I'm just concerned about the fact that the decision was made before we knew how we were going to pay for it."

Fredericksburg resident Doreen Cook echoed McGrath's comments.

"They said, 'Well I guess I should have done my due diligence because I didn't know what it was going to cost us.' That's not benefiting the taxpayer at all," said Cook, who also said board members have not done their due diligence in setting salaries for some of its county employees.

She expressed frustration about the contract with Chickasaw County EMS Director Joel Knutson that board members agreed to on Monday. Knutson currently receives $60,000 a year to serve as the director of the county-owned ambulance service and also is paid an additional $31 per hour if he takes on a paramedic shift. Starting July 1, though, he will be paid $80,000 a year and be required to work at least 60 hours every two weeks and will not be paid for taking on additional shifts.

Cook also said that the county "seems to start its employees at the highest rate ... even though they've never worked a day in that office. ... You need to be more responsible, much more responsible."

For the most part, the discussion remained civil during the meeting that was held in the courthouse's third-floor courtroom, and one county resident interjected a little humor into the proceedings.

Rural New Hampton resident Steve Kurash told the board that he felt they needed to "phase in" the family health insurance premium, but when he was done with his talk on the budget, he didn't sit down.

My last comment really isn't with the budget but I'm going to say it while I have this [microphone]," Kurash said as the courtroom erupted in laughter. "How about road rock on my road? I mean the wind turbine people didn't do me any favors, I've got potholes so I just want to throw that out there ... if you have a couple extra truckloads, put them on 160th."

But in the end, the message the board got Wednesday night and that its members will discuss at this coming Monday's meeting is that the tax-asking is simply too high.

"That tax asking was 3,040,088 when I left six years ago and now you're well over $6 million," Boge said.

"Try to work back through this process and have some trimming done and try to trim 75 percent of this tax-asking out of your budget," he said. "And then set a levy and then let your department heads manage their budgets because they'll work with you."

County to use opioid funds to bring program to area schools

BY BOB FENSKE
Of the Reporter

The Chickasaw County Board of Supervisors took the first step Monday in spending money the county has received as part of a national settlement of an opioid lawsuit.

The board gave County Attorney David Laudner, a member of the county's Opioid Committee, its blessing to go ahead with the first step in implementing the Too Good for Drugs program into at least three area schools.

Laudner said committee members agreed to bring the nationally-recognized program to fourth-graders at New Hampton, Nashua-Plainfield and Sumner-Fredericksburg.

"This is a good program, we thought. It came highly recommended from Pathways," Laudner told supervisors during their regular weekly meeting. "It's a national program. ... It's a legit thing, it's not just kind of stop in with an officer for a half-hour."

The county has received about $84,000 in settlement funds and will continue to receive more money in coming years, but there are federal requirements on how the funds can be used.

Laudner said the first step in bringing Too Good for Drugs to area schools is to hire a trainer "to teach our officers — both city [police] and [county] deputies who are going to be interested — the program so that they can go into the schools and teach the programs themselves. It will be team taught with someone from Pathways."

He said that the committee's request will have "zero impact on your budget."

Supervisor Travis Suckow did ask Laudner about students from Lawler.

"They have a bunch of kids who go to Turkey Valley," he said, and Laudner said he would reach out to both Turkey Valley and Winneshiek County officials to see what they were doing with their opioid funds.

Laudner said if all goes well, the committee hopes to have the program up and running either this fall or sometime during the 2024-25 school year.

Too Good for Drugs is a 10-session program, and Laudner said each session lasts for an hour.

The website for the program says it teaches five essential character development skills to build self-efficacy, promote healthy development and academic success. Those aims include setting reachable goals, making responsible decisions, bonding with pro-social others, identifying and managing emotions and communication effectively.

County gets decent news when it comes to 2024-25 rock bids

The Chickasaw County Board of Supervisors received somewhat good news when they joined County Engineer Roman Lensing Monday morning to open rock bids for the 2024-25 fiscal year.

The low bid of $2,042,468.42 was submitted by Bruening Rock Products of Decorah. The bid was about $17,000 lower than Lensing estimated.

He told board members that the contract also allows the county to purchase more rock for the same "unit price" if it chooses to do so but also lets the county receive the same "unit price" if it chooses to purchase less rock because of budgetary reasons.

eight district championships, finished as runners-up in four more divisions and claimed both Iowa History Awards presented at the contest as Caleb Sinnwell's individual website claimed the senior (grades 9-12) award while Jackson Mehmen's individual website claimed the junior (grades 6-8) award.

National History Day projects must finish in the top-two at a district meet to advance to the state meet, and Turner said, as in past years, some of her students' projects will dramatically change before they head to Des Moines next month for the state contest.

"It's likely that interviews will be conducted, content added and replaced, and rough spots ironed out," she said. "Only two projects in each category advance from the state to the national contest, so our projects must get better to earn that opportunity."

Primary not the only way for candidates to get on fall ballot and Terry Johnson for the District 4 seat — filed nomination papers last week, but one name was conspicuously absent from the final list of candidates.

Current District 4 Supervisor Matt Kuhn, who was elected in 2020 and served as the board's chairman in 2022 and 2023, did not file papers for the Republican nomination for the district that includes the eastern half of New Hampton, as well as rural areas to the east of the county's largest city.

"It was a hard decision to make with all of the phone calls and texts in support," Kuhn said. "However, at this time, I can't commit to another four years with all of my other commitments outside the boardroom."

Johnson, a retired banker who attends numerous supervisor meetings, gave Republicans a decision to make when he filed nomination papers. He will face New Hampton resident Issac Carter, the Croell Inc. employee who filed his candidate papers on March 13, in the June primary.

Meanwhile, Hackman decided last week to seek a third term despite saying several times over the past year that he would not seek re-election.

Hackman, who is the longest-tenured member of the Board of Supervisors said in a social media post that he changed his mind in large part because of the number of calls he took from constituents who wanted him to run.

"The hardship of the job is not being able to make everyone happy, but I always have reasoning on why I vote the way I do," Hackman said in a Facebook post announcing his re-election campaign. "The D and R, the independent, the non-registered, does not matter, but all people in general, all the constituents of Chickasaw County [do]."

He will face Joan Knoll, who served as the county auditor for 12 years before seeking a supervisor seat four years ago, when Hackman won a relatively easy election — outpolling Knoll 730-617.

Three more incumbents — Sheriff Ryan Shawver, District 1 Supervisor Steve Breitbach and Auditor Sheila Shekleton — will also be on the primary ballot. Shawver and Shekleton are running as Republicans while Breitbach is running as a Democrat.

And while there are seven candidates who are running in the primary, that doesn't mean they will be the only ones on the general election ballot in November.

That's because candidates with no party affiliation can file nomination papers during the August filing period, and parties that do not have a candidate in the primary may hold nominating conventions to get a candidate on the ballot for the general election.

Sheriff: Letter is 'legit,' but says he won't solicit funds via mailing Chickasaw County Sheriff Ryan Shawver said earlier this week that he has received numerous questions about a fund-raising letter many county residents have received from the Iowa State Sheriff's and Deputies' Association.

And while he said the letter is "legit" and that his office is a member of the association, he also wanted to clear the air on the issue of his office soliciting funds.

"The Chickasaw County Sheriff's Office does benefit indirectly from any donations received by ISSDA in the form of law updates and continued trainings for our staff," Shawver wrote in a press release, but he also added, "Please do not feel obligated to donate."

He also said it is his policy not to send out letters asking for donations to support his office to the residents of the county.

"If support is ever needed for a project we are looking to fund without tax dollars," Shawver wrote, "I will do so in a public setting and not solicit funds via a mass mailing."

Those residents who have questions can call the Sheriff's Office at 641-394-3121.

Fredericksburg art gallery looking for artists to enter Area 3 show

The Iowa Artists organization is looking for artists to submit their original design and handcrafted artwork for the Iowa Artists Regional Area 3 Art Show. Iowa Artists is a statewide, non-profit organization that works to encourage and educate artists around the state.

This year the show will be held Saturday, April 13, from 9:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Plum Creek Art Center/Connie Mohr Gallery, Fredericksburg. The show will be judged by David Kamm, retired art professor/chair, Luther College. Blue ribbon winners will go onto the state show in May. In addition to the state show, awards for the years 2023 and 2024 Iowa Artists will also include a 3-D award for $50 in thanks to Hilde de Bruyne.

To enter the show, artists must be 18 years or older and members of the Iowa Artists, Region 3, which includes Allamakee, Chickasaw, Clayton, Fayette, Floyd, Howard, Mitchell and Winneshiek counties. Both two-dimensional and three-dimensional works will be accepted. 2-D works include paintings, pastel, watercolor, ink, pencil, charcoal or collage. 3-D works include ceramics, sculpture, fiber, basketry, textile, wood and jewelry.

All works must be original and completed within the last two years. No copies, kits, or crafts will be accepted for judging. The maximum measurement allowed for painting/drawings is four feet, including the frame. All paintings must be ready to hang using wire. Deadline for entry into the show is April 6.

Information to obtain membership forms, rules and entry forms can be obtained from the show coordinators, Sue Kuennen at susan.kuennen@yahoo.com or 414-380-6904, or Becky Schoenfeld at schoenfeldbecky@gmail.com or 641-330-5831.

'Rain likely' may be two most favorite words for area farmers who have been dealing with severe drought conditions since last spring.

"We've been able to get a lot of work done in our fields this month," said Basol, referring to applying manure and anhydrous ammonia, "and it's not slowing planting down at all. I mean I can't tell you how much we needed this. It's great, great, great, and if you had more room, I'd throw a few more greats into it."

As of Thursday morning, Nashua had received 2.5 inches of precipitation in March, far above slightly above the normal 1.66 inches it normally receives in the month. The only other month since February 2023 in which Nashua has received above average precipitation was in January, when the city received 1.35 inches, about two-tenths of an inch more than it normally gets in the first month of the year.

Still, more is needed — much more.

"But this is going to really help us going into planting season," Basol said. "Honestly, though, if it wants to do this through say April 11 every single day, none of us are going to complain."

And for once, the drought picture in the Nashua area took a turn for the better when the U.S. Drought Monitor released its weekly report.

While all of Floyd County and much of Chickasaw and Bremer counties are still enduring extreme drought conditions, for the first time since last summer, there are pockets in the area that have been downgraded to "severe" drought.

"Severe is better than extreme," Basol said, "because at least we're heading in the right direction."

To recent weather, especially Sunday, presented some challenges to those out and about.

Highways for the most part were slushy and several vehicles slid off roadways but no major accidents were reported.

And those who decided to shovel Sunday got a workout because they were moving more water than snow.

It was much worse, though, north of New Hampton, where snow fell for much of the day on Sunday and led two school districts — Crestwood and Decorah — to call off classes on Monday.

And while we appear to be done with snow, at least for a while, more rain is in the forecast, beginning on Easter Sunday and through at least the early part of the workweek.

"I just looked at the forecast for [Nashua] on Monday," Basol said, "and I see the words rain likely. Trust me, there are a lot of farmers who think rain likely are the two best words in the English language right now."

the 13-man roster — they welcome back plenty of experience; in fact five-sixths of the Huskies who took the course for last year's Top of Iowa Conference East Division and Class 1A sectional tournaments are back for some more walks around the course this spring.

In addition to Bouillon, juniors Dawson Glaser and Cal Levi and sophomores Devon Blanchard and Tyler Zimmer return.

And the Huskies will have plenty of depth as the roster also includes juniors William Lindeland and Blake Wahl, sophomores Eli Kalainoff, Trent Rodruck and Kaden McMichael and freshmen Christopher Kalvig, Lucas Sinnwell and Dawson Peterson.

"I think they're ready to get out there, play a round and see where they're at," Trost said, and his Huskies will hopefully get a chance to do that on Monday when they're scheduled to play Charles City and Osage at Charles City's Cedar Ridge Golf Course. "You can get a lot of things done here [inside at the Husky Wellness Center], but you need to get outside, on a course, to really see where you're at. You can only hit into a net so long."

Whenever the season does start, though, Trost wants to see his players post scores that don't resemble a winding, mountain highway.

"Obviously, we want to lower the score throughout the season," he said, "but I think our guys know that at the very least we have to find some consistency. We can't be bouncing all over the place. It's just as frustrating for them as it is to me to go low 40s one day and then in the 50s the next day."

Best of luck to our Husky spring sports student-athletes!

dash and up) and make sure the Huskies are well-equipped to take on the state's best. Wilken placed 20th in the open 400 at state as a senior and competed in a couple relays (4x400, 4x800) at state during his Husky career.

"I'm glad to be back. I'm definitely happy to help some kids succeed like I was helped when I was back in high school," said Wilken. "It's definitely fun making it down to state."

Sudol has two other assistant coaches on his staff – Nick Henningsen (sprints) and Jay Connor (hurdles, high jump, specialty events).

"There's four of us. You wouldn't think you would need four coaches for a track team, but it really helps out with us four. We have all of our individual ways we run the track team," said Wilken.

The N-P girls and boys teams have each run twice at the Wartburg Indoor this month. There's significant down time in track and field – which means you have to be ready at a moment's notice when your name is called for an event. That includes thinking a race will be run even when you thought two days prior the meet would get wiped out by a weather forecast that can change on a dime.

"From the first day of practice we have been preparing for the Iowa weather. We knew it would flip. The group of ladies that we have are extremely focused, though. Not too many times do we have to remind them to get back on task," said McCall.

During the times that N-P is still at practice, but not working out – that's where each head coach gets creative.

"They know the weekly practice plan ahead of time and know our expectations. We do try to incorporate fun activities and skill work so it is not all heavy running," said McCall.

It's that balancing act between working hard and still being able to have lighthearted moments away from the oval that makes preparing for when the meets really start to count not seem like such a daily chore.

"Knowing to have fun, but at the same time knowing to have fun and succeed," said Wilken. "Track is 100 percent a team sport – at the same time it's an individual sport. You have a very high chance to make it to state in track if you really push it and you really work hard at what you want to do."

Sudol seconded what Wilken had to say about staying focused and not getting complacent.

"The kids are still working hard. That's the biggest thing – with boys it's just keeping their interest in track where running every day, that can get difficult," said Sudol. "The boys are interested right now."

Sudol and Wilken each mentioned a fun "task" – if you want to call it that – that other track teams do as well now and again. Area cross country squads are also known to partake in the exercise, which helps build chemistry and tighten the team bond.

It's called a scavenger hunt.

Wilken explained that coaches will pick five destinations to run to – an example would be Casey's convenience store, out by the Avenue of the Saints. Whoever completes those treks to those chosen locations the fastest, wins the contest. A team of say, four or five athletes, has to have photo documentation to prove they succeeded in achieving their goals.

Connor perhaps summed it up best.

"You have to have a picture of everyone in the picture, that way you don't have three or four high-performance people do all the work and the other ones just hide under the bridge and they show up and say, 'tough workout,'" smiled Connor.

On a more serious note, McCall described what her Huskies go through in a normal practice in between meets on a chosen day. She said her squad has been able to get outside and practice more this season than any other under her direction, which included last week.

"Monday we did a lot of skill work – long jump drills, high jump drills, hurdle drills, handoffs, med ball/agility/speed workouts, shuffling/back pedal-ing," said McCall. "Our distance girls were outside for a 1-2 mile run. Tuesday we were all inside doing a stair circuit work-out, but I think it is extremely important to continue to practice outside as we will (besides two indoor meets) perform outside. It is important for our muscles to be trained and ready to go in that situation, as well as our lungs. It is the best way to be prepared for meets."

N-P track teams itching to head outdoors

Opening of outdoor season pushed back to next week after St. Ansgar meet called off Tuesday because of the cold

By KELLY TERPSTRA
Of the Reporter

When it comes to weather in Iowa, everybody has a take.

As well they should as the unpredictable mood that Mother Nature has been in lately will turn any storm watcher into armchair meteorologists.

The Nashua-Plainfield track teams found out what temps in the 30s and heavy wind can do to a season opening outdoor track meet.

It's called push it back, reschedule for a later date and hope for the sun to shine with more palatable running, throwing and jumping conditions when the Huskies can better perform.

For N-P head coach Amber McCall and her defending state runner-up Huskies — the St. Ansgar co-ed meet this past Tuesday that was called off would have been a chance for her squad to compete against other area teams amongst the unpleasant elements.

A blanket and a hoodie when not competing would have almost certainly been a prerequisite in order to take on such a frigid environment for late March as the one that materialized earlier this week.

That meet didn't take place because of the inclement weather and was rescheduled for Monday, April 8.

"I was honestly surprised the meet was postponed. I kept telling the girls to be ready and that Saint Ansgar will run their meet no matter the weather. We have been there at meets during really, really cold nights," said McCall, who helped lead N-P to its first ever state title in girls athletics in 2022 with a 1A state team title in track.

While McCall and her Huskies were on standby and ready to roll — so were Chase Sudol and his N-P boys squad.

Although Sudol isn't going to lose any sleep in missing out on that scheduled first outdoor meet of the season up north on the Saints' home oval. He knows there'll be plenty of opportunities down the road to get his Huskies battle-tested for a state run come May.

"It's too cold now," said Sudol. "That would have been rough. I wasn't disappointed at all to have it cancelled to not have to go up there and compete in that. There's nice weather coming. We're going to be fine — no point in rushing things this early. There's lots of nice days ahead."

There will be at least two outdoor meets on the Huskies' plate next week — barring unforeseen circumstances such as a dip in the predicted mercury or bothersome precipitation mucking up the two track squads' plans again.

"Obviously, we want to get out and compete and see what some of these young guys can do," said Sudol. "We've got plenty of time. Next week we'll get two meets in."

Sudol is confident his squad will kick start the outdoor season next week in a co-ed meet on Tuesday at Osage and another scheduled run at Hudson on Thursday. The N-P girls will more than likely travel to Hampton-Dumont-CAL next week Thursday based on the current weather forecast.

Sudol has just over 30 athletes out for track this year and one former star runner of his — 2022 N-P alum Drew Wilken — has hopped on board to help out as an assistant coach this spring.

Sudol is happy to have him as he'll work with long-distance runners (400

EYEING ANOTHER BIG YEAR

HUSKY GIRLS MAY LACK QUANTITY BUT THEY HAVE PLENTY OF QUALITY BACK

By BOB FENSKE

Almost all the ingredients are in place for the Nashua-Plainfield girls golf team to make another state tournament run this spring.

The Huskies have a "hammer" in junior Paige Franzen. They have two players — senior Natalie Sinnwell and junior Faith Franzen — who blossomed into solid, top-notch golfers in 2023. Nashua-Plainfield also has another player, senior Payton Howland, returning who teed it up at last year's Class 1A state tournament.

All that's missing right now is that fourth scorer to replace Autumn Nelson, who graduated a year ago, but longtime Nashua-Plainfield coach Jeff Trost believes that player is on the Huskies' roster. Howland, he says, has shown marked improvement since last spring, and two newcomers — sophomores Paisley McCain and Elayna O'Neill — have shown promise.

"I'm pretty confident that we can find that fourth," he said. "Payton's game has improved a lot, and both Paisley and Elayna have potential with this game. It might take a little time, but I like our chances of finding that fourth by the time it matters."

And last year's success is just that — last year's.

Trost told the story of a day earlier this week when Franzen had a chance to attend a Blake Shelton concert in Moline, Illinois, but during the day, the veteran coach received a text from her. She was staying home; she didn't want to miss golf practice.

"I told her I really didn't have a problem with her going," Trost said, "but at practice, she said she was putting golf first. ... That's the kind of athlete Paige is, and not too many high school kids are like that."

Franzen, though, isn't a one-girl team.

Her cousin, Faith Franzen, finished a solid 28th at the state tournament a year ago while Sinnwell burst onto the scene with a breakout senior season.

"They put a lot of work into their games," Trost said, "and then when they had some success early, you could kind of see their confidence just blossom. That's a fun part of this game when you see kids realize that if they can shoot low once, they can do it again and again."

And now the six girls who make up the Huskies' golf team meet that was held at Cedar Pointe Golf Course in Boone.

"Paige is as determined and focused golfer as I've ever coached," Trost said.

And that's saying something, for Trost is now in his 44th year coaching golf at Nashua-Plainfield.

"She brings everything she has to every meet and, more importantly, to every practice," Trost said. "If Paige shoots an 80 — like she did at the regional final last year — she's the kind of golfer who thinks it should have been a 75. Her drive, like I said, I've been around awhile but I've had very few golfers with that kind of focus and determination."

And now the six girls who make up the Huskies' golf team are ready to get outside and play.

"We need some February, early March weather," Trost said with a laugh. "That first week, we were outside all the time, but we've been pushed back inside lately. They're ready to play a round."

And hopefully, they'll get that chance next week as the Huskies open the season on Monday with a triangular at Cedar Ridge Golf Course in Charles City and then play their home opener at the Nashua Town and Country Club in a triangular against Central Springs and Rockford.

Consistency is key goal for N-P boys

Huskies may have just one senior on their roster, but they return plenty of experience the challenge with our boys in recent years."

Summed up: The Huskies have been consistently inconsistent.

Don't get Trost wrong; he enjoys coaching this group of boys, but if he had a magic wand, there's no doubt he would wave it and, presto, the Huskies would be consistent with each shot and each round.

"We work on it, we talk about it, we harp on it," he said, "and if we ever find it, I think we have the potential to have a nice little golf team."

The good news is that while the Huskies are young — Wyatt Bouillon is the lone senior on
